The Central Labor Union

OF BOSTON AND VICINITY.

THE Central Labor Union of Massachusetts, now the Central Labor Union of Boston and vicinity, was organized July 24, 1878; and was first known as the Central Labor Council. Prior to this centralization of labor forces, the economic movement commanded very limited consideration at the hands of capital and through the columns of the press.

Like all progressive movements, the infancy of the C. L. U. was surrounded by much discouragement and it took several years of hard work on the part of its projectors to impress its practical utility upon the scattered crafts, who were wasting precious time and opportunities upon isolated attempts to have adjusted local differences, which should have been the concern of organized craftsmen generally.

The persistency and indefatigable labors, however, of the promoters of the C. L. U. secured the attention and affiliation of nearly all trade and labor unions, and when called upon on Monday, September 6, 1886, to celebrate its first Labor Day demonstration, over ten thousand members of labor organizations after but two weeks of preparation, marched through the streets of Boston to the depots and wharves, on their way to a grand picnic given by the central body.

The grand success of this celebration suggested the idea of a legal holiday, and at the next session of the Legislature such request was endorsed by 40,000 signers and that year the request was granted. The first Monday in September, 1887, accordingly, the first legal holiday, was celebrated with far more enthusiasm and eclat than its predecessor.

The C. L. U. is founded upon the triple corner stones, organization, education, legislation, and how faithfully and zealously their principles have been lived up to its history promptly attests.

The inspiration of shorter hours of labor, through the medium of the American Federation of Labor has since been injected into it; and its service, even in this direction, must be acknowledged.

The efforts of the C. L. U. in the direction of its principles — organization, education and legislation, are too well-known to members of labor circles to call for extended reference here.

The C. L. U. at no time in its history was healthier or more influential, as an instrument for the propagation of union principles and union requirements, than it is to-day.

Programme of Labor Day.

The Chief Marshal and staff, also the Marshal of the Central Labor Union division and his staff, will meet at 45 Eliot Street at 8.30 on the morning of the parade.

The guests of the Central Labor Union will meet Mr. C. O. Wood at Room 5, 45 Eliot Street, at 9 o'clock, on the morning of Labor Day.

Delegates intending to parade as such, will meet at 45 Eliot Street, at 9 A. M. and receive badges from one of the members. They will then report to Mr. Charles H. Breadmore, Commander of the Central Labor Union delegates, who will take them in charge.

Route of Parade.

The procession will form at Copley Square and will pass over the following route: Copley Square, to Boylston Street, to Berkeley, to Tremont, to Dedham, to Washington, to School, to Beacon, to Charles, where the reviewing officers will be located. The organizations, with the exception of the Brewers and Bakers, will be dismissed. The Bakers and Brewers will march to the Common, where a mass meeting will be held, and will be addressed by General Organizer Weiseman of the Bakers' International Union immediately after the parade.

Amusements.

The Carpenters will hold a picnic at Caledonian Grove in West Roxbury.

All organizations will keep "Open House" at their respective meeting places after the parade.

History of Building Trades' Council.

ORGANIZED JUNE 2, 1892.

THE Building Trades' Council of Boston and Vicinity originated as the direct result of the experiences and failings of the old Amalgamated Building Trades' Council.

The foundation of the Building Trades' Council rests on the unity of action with which the various affiliated unions accept and enforce a uniform working card issued by the Council and borne by every bona fide trade unionist employed on a building. Any man carrying a card is privileged to challenge the next man to him for evidence of his unionism; which challenge is met by a union man with the exhibition of his card. Thus the working card is in reality a missionary, pointing out to the zealous trade unionist the weak spot in the ranks of organized labor and directing his attention to the point where hard work must be put to propagate the principles of the union. As must be seen by hee fundamental principle of the Council — the working card and the manner in which it is used — the Council is a constructive body and necessarily not an aggressive body.

The moral, social and industrial advancement of its members being the aim of trade unionism the Council feels that organization must commend itself to all, and so leaves the card to advance the movement as an educator and object lesson among our fellow workmen in place of the proven ineffectual method of striking, which now is only resorted to for defense.

The Council has found that many persons are favorable to organized labor when its aims, objects and purposes are laid before them, but often they found out too late that they had given their work into the hands of unscrupulous employers who were constructing their buildings with non-union men, disregarding all the efforts of organized labor and practically obstructing its advancement. It is to such fair minded persons intending to build that the Council, through its business agent, places its request for fair conditions and employment of union men in the proposed building before the owner is tied down by contract. This peaceful method has placed more buildings, as thorough union jobs, than the untold strikes of the past.

The fact that we can create a demand for union labor makes trade unionism more attractive to a certain class than years of agitation.

Acting on the above lines, the Council has safely weathered the depressing conditions so prevalent during the past year, and is now prepared to go ahead on the true and tried lines of organizing and educating.

Labor Omnia Vincit.

I WOULD hail the day upon which it could be truthfully said, "Labor conquers everything," with inexpressible gratification. Such a day would stand first in Labor's Millennium, that prophesied era when Christ shall begin his reign on the earth to continue a thousand years.

The old Latin fathers did a large business in manufacturing maxims, and the one I have selected for a caption of this article has been required to play shibboleth since, like "a thing of beauty and a joy forever," it came forth from its ancient laboratory.

It is one of those happy expressions which embodies quite as much fancy as fact.

The time has arrived for thoughtful men identified with labor — by which I mean the laboring classes — to inquire, what does labor conquer? or what has it conquered in all the ages? or what is it now conquering?

If by the term conquer, is meant that labor, and only labor, removes obstacles to physical progress — levels down mountains or tunnels them — builds roads and spans rivers and chasms with bridges — hews down the forests — digs canals, transforms deserts into gardens of fruitfulness — plows and sows and reaps, delves in the mines for coal and all the precious metals, — if it is meant that labor builds all the forges and factories, and all the railroads that girdle the world and all the ships that cleave the waves, and mans them, builds all the cities and every monument in all lands, — I say if such things are meant when we vauntingly exclaim, "labor conquers everything," no one will controvert the declaration — no one will demur — with one acclaim the averments will stand confessed.

But with all these grand achievements to the credit of labor, how stands labor itself? Having subdued every obstacle to physical progress, what is its condition? The answer is humiliating beyond the power of exaggeration and the aphorism, "Labor Omnia Vincit," becomes the most conspicuous delusion that ever had a votary since time began.

It will be well for labor on Labor Day to concentrate its vision on the United States of America. The field is sufficiently broad and there are enough object lessons in full view to engage the attention of the most critical, and it will be strange indeed if the inquiry is not made. What has labor conquered up to date in the United States? The inquiry is fruitful of thought. What is the testimony of the labor press of the country, corroborated by statistics which defy contradiction? It is this, that the land is cursed with wage slavery — with the condition that labor, which, according to the proverb, "conquers everything," is itself conquered and lies prostrate and manacled beneath the iron-clad hoofs of a despotism as cruel as ever cursed the world.

LABOR OMNIA VINCIT==Concluded.

To hew and dig, to build and repair, to toil and starve, is not conquering in any proper sense of the term. Conquerors are not clothed in rags. Conquerors do not starve. The homes of conquerors are not huts, dark and dismal, where wives and children moan like the night winds and sob like the rain. Conquerors are not clubbed as if they were thieves, shot down as if they were vagabond dogs, nor imprisoned as if they were felons, by the decrees of despots. No! Conquerors rule — their word is law. Labor is not in the condition of a conqueror in the United States.

Go to the coal mines, go to the New England factories, go to Homestead and Pullman, go to the sweat shops and railroad shops, go to any place in all of the broad land where anvils ring, where shuttles fly, where toilers earn their bread in the sweat of their faces, and exclaim, "Labor Omnia Vincit" and you will be laughed to scorn.

Why is it that labor does not conquer anything? Why does it not assert its mighty power? Why does it not rule in Congress, in Legislatures and in Courts? I answer because it is factionized, because it will not unify, because, for some inscrutable reason, it prefers division, weakness and slavery, rather than unity, strength and victory.

Will it always be thus unmindful of its power and prerogatives? I do not think so. Will it always tamely submit to degradation? I protest that it will not. Labor has the ballot. It has redeeming power. I write from behind prison bars, the victim of a decree of a petty tyrant. My crime was that I sought, at the risk of life and liberty, to rescue Pullman slaves from the grasp of an abnormal monster of greed and rapacity.

I think a day is coming when "Labor Omnia Vincit" will change conditions. I hear the slogan of the clans of organized labor. It cheers me. I believe with the poet that:

> A Labor Day is coming when our starry flag shall wave,
> Above a land where famine no longer digs a grave,
> Where money is not master, nor a workingman a slave —
> For the right is marching on.

In an interview with a sub-committee of the Joint Municipal Committee of the Central Labor Union and Building Trades Council, Mr. Michael Meehan, of the firm of Meehan & Jones, said: "This firm deserves more than a formal notice from the representatives of organized labor. Under its administration of the Street Department, the department was placed upon a permanent basis, where it has remained ever since.

"As contractors for the subway, their voluntary announcement that none but voters and union labor would be employed in any department of the work meant a good deal, particularly when it is remembered that cheap foreign labor and non-union men were crowding for employment at any price.

"Their stand in favor of weekly payments, good work and good wages should be commended."
